3. Procedure

3.1. Student-Initiated Deferment, Suspension and Cancellation of Study

3.1.1. Overview

International students may apply to defer their study if they are unable to commence their course on the scheduled course commencement date. They may apply for voluntary suspension of their study if they are unable to attend the course for a specified period because of compassionate or compelling circumstances. They may voluntarily withdraw from a course at any time, noting if this withdrawal is within six months of course commencement and a letter of release is requested, this may be denied under the International Student Transfer Between Registered Providers Policy and Procedure.

Compassionate or compelling circumstances are generally those beyond the control of the student and which have a detrimental impact on the student's capacity or ability to progress through a course. Compassionate or compelling circumstances can include:

- serious illness or injury where a medical certificate states that the student was unable to attend classes or study;
- bereavement of close family members such as parents or grandparents, with supporting documentary evidence;
- major political upheaval or natural disaster in the home country requiring a student's emergency travel to their home country or evidence from a psychologist that the situation in their home country has had a detrimental impact on the student's studies;
- a permanent or temporary disability which is supported by a medical assessment that recommends a break from study or a reduced study load;
- a traumatic experience which could include, but is not limited to, involvement in or witnessing of an accident or a crime committed against the student, or the student has been a witness to a crime, and this has had impact on the student. These cases should be supported by police or psychologists' reports; and
- inability to begin studying on the course commencement date due to delay in receiving a student visa.

The above are examples provided by the Department of Home Affairs of what may be considered compassionate or compelling circumstances. APAC staff involved in the relevant decision-making process must exercise their professional judgement in determining if there are compassionate and compelling circumstances. APAC staff must assess each application on its individual merits. When determining whether compassionate or compelling circumstances exist, all documentary evidence provided to support the claim is considered. Copies of these documents, together with a detailed record of why the decision was made is retained in the student's file.

International students are advised of the circumstances and consequences regarding deferment, suspension, or cancellation of study prior to enrolment and during the student orientation process. International students applying to defer, suspend or withdraw from their study will be reminded on the Application for Deferment for Higher Education Domestic and International Students; the Application for Suspension of Studies for Higher Education Domestic and International Students; and the Application for Withdrawal for Higher Education Domestic and International Students that a successful application may affect their student visa. International students are advised to contact the Department of Home Affairs regarding the potential impact any deferment, suspension or withdrawal of study may have on their student visa prior to formally lodging an application to defer, voluntarily suspend or withdraw from their study.
